Woodley Park News

The McDonald's architect continues to revise his client's design proposal for the Woodley Park location. The latest version is on the website. It shows that they want to replace the existing enclosure over the stairway. It appears, however, that the DC Building Code (DCMR 12A-3209, for anyone interested) generally prohibits encroachments of this sort into public space, and public space staff says that they can find no record of a permit for the current enclosure. I assume that McDonald's views a much-used uncovered stairway as a safety concern and might not undertake exterior renovations if it cannot replace the existing enclosure. The WPCA Board is interested in your views – do you favor an enclosure over the stairway or do you think it should be eliminated. Let me know what you think.

The WPCA Board is working on plans for the Spring membership meeting. Let us know if there are there any speakers you want to hear or subjects that should be included in the meeting.
